

All "ears" to the needs of small businesses

7 March 2014

The Fair Work Ombudsman will meet with key members of the small business community at a roundtable in Melbourne today.

The aim of the three-hour forum is to "start a conversation" about how the Fair Work agencies can work together to support small business.

The discussion is being co-hosted by Fair Work Ombudsman Natalie James, Fair Work Commission General Manager Bernadette O'Neill and the Director of Fair Work Building and Construction, Nigel Hadgkiss.

The Commonwealth Small Business Minister, the Hon. Bruce Billson, will attend for part of the proceedings.

Fair Work Ombudsman Natalie James says that as a regulator, it is important for her agency to strike the right balance between education and compliance.

"We need to understand the impact of what we propose on the people affected by it, particularly small business people," she said.

"Understanding the perspectives of small business will help us, either as regulators or adjudicators, to assess whether we are adequately supporting the needs of those who require our help.

"Ultimately, we want to ensure that small business people have every opportunity to meet their workplace obligations and have access to reliable, credible resources.

"We recognise that more often than not, employers want to do the right thing, and today's roundtable is about ensuring that we are well positioned to help our small business clients."

The Fair Work Ombudsman has recently established a dedicated Small Business Strategy Team that has been tasked with responding to the needs of small businesses.

"We're serious about getting input from those who are part of the small business community, and tailoring our services and resources to suit their needs, so consultation is a really important part of our work," Ms James said.

The Fair Work Ombudsman has a dedicated webpage for small business at www.fairwork.gov.au/smallbusiness (www.fairwork.gov.au/find-help-for/small-business/default)
