

Taking family & domestic violence leave

All employees are entitled to 5 days of unpaid family and domestic violence leave each year of their employment. This includes part-time and casual employees.

Employees are entitled to the full 5 days from the day they start work. They don't have to build it up over time.

The 5 days renews each 12 months but doesn't accumulate from year to year if it isn't used.

Example: Taking family and domestic violence leave

An employee started work on 14 December 2018. This employee is entitled to 5 days unpaid family and domestic violence leave from the day they start work.

In January, the employee takes 1 day of unpaid family and domestic violence leave. The next week, they take another day.

On 14 December 2019, this employee is entitled to 5 days again. The 3 days they didn't use during their first year of employment aren't carried over into the next year.

When can employees take family and domestic violence leave?

Employees can take the leave if they need to do something to deal with the impact of family and domestic violence and it's impractical to do so outside their ordinary hours of work.

For example, this could include:

- making arrangements for their safety, or safety of a close relative (including relocation)
- attending court hearings, or
- accessing police services.

The leave doesn't need to be taken all at once and can be taken as single or multiple days.

An employer and employee can also agree for an employee to take less than 1 day at a time, or for the employee to take more than 5 days.

Continuous service

Unpaid family and domestic violence leave doesn't break an employee's period of continuous service but doesn't count as service when calculating accumulated entitlements such as paid leave.

Other types of leave

Employees experiencing family and domestic violence may want to take other types of leave, such as annual leave. Depending on the circumstances, there may also be times when they're entitled to paid sick leave.
