

When businesses change hands

Read our fact sheet on what happens when businesses change hands.

On this page:

- What is a transfer of business?
- What is a 'transferable instrument'?
- What happens to employee entitlements on a transfer of business?
- What happens to employment records on a transfer of business?
- Contact us

Download the fact sheet:

- When businesses change hands \(PDF 222.9KB\) \(www.fairwork.gov.au/ArticleDocuments/723/When-businesses-change-hands.pdf.aspx\)

What is a transfer of business?

The transfer of business provisions under the Fair Work Act 2009, deals with situations where a business is transferred from one national system employer (e.g. a company) to another national system employer. The result may be that an award, agreement, or another type of 'transferable instrument' follows the transfer and becomes binding on the new employer. Therefore, when an employer buys or sells a business, the sale may affect the employment and entitlements of the employees already working for the business.

Under the Fair Work Act 2009, a transfer of business takes place if the following requirements are satisfied:

- the employment of an employee (the 'transferring employee') of the old employer has terminated
- within three months after the termination, the employee becomes employed by the new employer
- the work the employee performs for the new employer (the 'transferring work') is the same or substantially the same as the work they performed for the old employer
- at least one of the following connections exists between the two employers:
  - an arrangement that the new employer owns or has use of some or all of the old employer's assets that relate to the transferring work
  - the work the employee does is outsourced by the old employer to the new employer
  - the work previously outsourced is insourced
  - they are associated entities within the meaning of section 50AAA of the Corporations Act 2001 (there are a number of ways entities can be associated – broadly speaking, it involves one entity having a controlling interest in the other).

Given the above, there is no transfer of business for the purposes of the Fair Work Act 2009 unless at least one employee moves to the new employer and they are doing 'transferring work'.

What is a 'transferable instrument'?

Where there has been a transfer of business, certain workplace instruments (transferable instruments) that covered employees of the old employer continue to cover those employees employed by the new employer.

Each of the following is a transferable instrument:

- an agreement (an enterprise agreement approved by the Fair Work Commission, a collective agreement, a preserved individual or collective state agreement, an Australian Workplace Agreement, an Individual Transitional Employment Agreement, a certified agreement made before 27 March 2006, and an old industrial relations agreement)
- a workplace determination
- a named employer award (an award that covers one or more named employers or one or more specified classes of employers).

The transferable instrument will cover a transferring employee while they are performing transferring work until it is terminated, or until a new workplace instrument commences which can cover the transferring employees.

Other arrangements that can transfer:

- individual flexibility arrangements
- guarantee of annual earnings.

Any new employees that you engage will be covered under the applicable modern award or another enterprise agreement. If there is no modern award or enterprise agreement that covers the new staff, then the transferable instrument may also apply to the new employees.

The Fair Work Commission can make orders about who a transferable instrument applies to, or how it will operate.

What happens to employee entitlements on a transfer of business?

Under the Fair Work Act 2009, there is no obligation on employers to notify their employees of a transfer of business or what workplace instrument will apply. However, employers have to give every new employee a copy of the Fair Work Information Statement before, or as soon as possible after, they start their new job. The Statement explains the effect of a transfer of business on an employee's entitlements. Casual employees must also be given the Casual Employment Information Statement.

Generally, where there is a transfer of employment, service with the old employer counts as service with the new employer. However, there are exceptions to this general principle. When a new employer is not an associated entity of the old employer, they may decide not to recognise a transferring employee's previous accumulated service for annual leave or redundancy pay under the National Employment Standards (NES) that now apply.

If the service is not recognised, the old employer may be under an obligation to pay the affected employees their accrued entitlements (such as annual leave or redundancy).

If the employee has already received entitlements based on service from the old employer, that service is not counted again in determining entitlements with the new employer. For example, if payment in lieu of notice of termination is given by the old employer, the period of notice for any subsequent termination by the second employer is not calculated based on service with the old employer.

What happens to employment records on a transfer of business?

The Fair Work Regulations 2009 provides the requirements and obligations of employers concerning records of transferring employees.

The old employer is required to transfer the employment record for each transferring employee at the time the connection between the two employers occurs (i.e. when the transfer of assets occurs, when the work is outsourced or insourced or, for associated entities, when the employee is transferred).

If the transferring employee becomes an employee of the new employer after the transfer, the new employer must ask the old employer to provide them with the employee's records. The old employer must give the records to the new employer.

These records are then required to be kept by the new employer for seven years in line with their record keeping obligations under the Fair Work Act 2009.

Transfer of business provisions are provided for by sections 307–316 of the Fair Work Act 2009.

Contact us

Fair Work Online: www.fairwork.gov.au

Fair Work Infoline: 13 13 94

Need language help?

Contact the Translating and Interpreting Service (TIS) on 13 14 50

Hearing and speech assistance

Call through the National Relay Service (NRS):

- For TTY: 13 36 77. Ask for the Fair Work Infoline 13 13 94
- Speak and Listen: 1300 555 727. Ask for the Fair Work Infoline 13 13 94

Contact us

Fair Work Online: www.fairwork.gov.au

Fair Work Infoline: 13 13 94

Need language help?

Contact the Translating and Interpreting Service (TIS) on 13 14 50

Hearing & speech assistance

Call through the National Relay Service (NRS):

For TTY: 13 36 77. Ask for the Fair Work Infoline 13 13 94

Speak & Listen: 1300 555 727. Ask for the Fair Work Infoline 13 13 94

---

The Fair Work Ombudsman is committed to providing advice that you can rely on. The information contained on this website is general in nature. If you are unsure about how it applies to your situation you can call our Infoline on 13 13 94 or speak with a union, industry association or workplace relations professional. Visitors are warned that this site may inadvertently contain names or pictures of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who have recently died.